
Leaflet for authors of university publications

Title of the thesis:

According to the Urheberrechtsgesetz 1936, §§ 42 und 42a in their current version, I take note of the following:

The printed version of the university thesis is placed in the University Library of TU Wien (a dissertation also in the National Library), made generally accessible and thus published.

1. As long as the thesis has not been published or is out of print, the university library may produce individual copies for its own use without the consent of the author. Individual copies may be produced for the own use of another person free of charge or by photocopying or other reprographic methods against payment.
2. If the thesis has already been published (i.e. has already been put into circulation through printing or another reproduction process) and is not yet out of print, the university library may produce individual copies of parts of it for its own use without the author's consent. Individual copies of parts of the thesis may be made on order for the personal use of another person free of charge or by photocopying or other reprographic processes, also against payment. (If the reproduction for personal use is made by copying, the entirety of a published work which is not yet out of print may also be reproduced without the consent of the author.)
3. In the directive of the Vice Rector Academic Affairs on the electronic submission of university publications (dissertations, diploma theses, master's theses) at TU Wien (see Mitteilungsblatt 2013, 14th issue, June 19th, 2013), the university management decided to require an electronic copy (PDF document, PDF/A or PDF from version 1.4) in addition to the printed copy, which must be uploaded to TISS. The university publications are made accessible to the public via a server of the University Library of the TU Wien, provided that there is no restriction on use and the author has given his consent. The copyright remains with the author; a later publication in print form by a publisher remains possible. The bibliographic data of the university publication, the uploading of the electronic version and the submission of the declaration of consent is done electronically in TISS
4. The thesis must be written independently; sources and aids other than those specified may not be used.

I certify that I have not previously submitted this thesis as an examination paper in any form, either at home or abroad.
